

This image is a pixelated, low-resolution representation of the South Korean flag, known as the Taegeukgi. It is displayed on a white background with a gray grid overlay. The flag's design is centered within a square frame. At the very center is a red Taegeuk symbol, which is a stylized, swirling shape representing the Korean concept of Taegeuk. Surrounding this central symbol are four black trigrams, each positioned in one of the four quadrants. The trigrams are composed of thick black lines forming geometric patterns. The entire flag is rendered in a pixelated style, with individual pixels visible as small squares. The colors used are red, black, and white, with the background being white and the grid lines being gray. The flag is centered and occupies most of the frame.
